Orchard series planned in South Sioux City

January 10, 2015 10:24 am

SOUTH SIOUX CITY | A free education series on developing orchards is planned.

South Sioux City Community Orchard and University of Nebraska Educators are sponsoring the events. Classes are 10 a.m.-noon at the South Sioux City Library, 2121 Dakota Ave.

Jan. 17: Natalia Bjorklund, horticulture educator with the University of Nebraska, will discuss pollinators.

Jan. 31: Vaughn Hammond, orchard expert from Nebraska City, will teach about fruits that do not grow on trees, like raspberries and blueberries.

Feb. 28: Steve Rasmussen, of the Nebraska Forest Service, will talk about pruning.

April 4: Keith Jarvi, of the Nebraska Extension, will discuss pesticides.

Call 402-987-2140 for more information.

Tags Nebraska, South Sioux City Library, University Of Nebraska, Nebraska Forest Service

Related Stories

- Fall, winter classes on fruit trees planned in Dakota City, Neb.
- Pender, Neb., man remembered for community involvement
- Fun, food, fossils just a few of Siouxland’s attractions
Why didn’t they tell drivers about this new rule? If you drive less than 35 mi/day read this...
Provide Savinos

These are the 20 toughest military units on earth: Where does your nation rank?
Rant Political

Even by her standards, Lady Gaga pushed the envelope beyond outrageous with these looks.
Rant Beats

Israel is a country full of amazing people, including some gorgeous celebrities.
Rant Places